HISTORY

Place Pigalle's history can be traced back mid-century to a seedy watering hole named the Lotus Inn. Adjacent to the La Salle Hotel (formerly known as the Outlook Hotel, built in 1909), the Lotus Inn was the probable first stop for sailors to have a quick drink before meeting up with a strumpet at the bordello upstairs.

Infamous early Seattleite Nellie Curtis ran the bordello masked as a hotel. Curtis purchased the hotel lease after Rosuke and T.K. Kodama, Japanese Americans, were sent to an internment camp in 1942. She ran a successful brothel for years which survived crackdowns and the earthquake of 1949.

The Lotus became Place Pigalle sometime in the 50's, named after the red-light district in Paris. Still a tarnished institution, complete with sawdust floors and a (supposed) blind man with a dog and an accordion , it was considered sport to toss beer and wine bottles out the west windows and watch them sail 50 feet down to the sidewalk and ravine. In the 60's the biker crowd that frequented the tavern nicknamed it "Pig Alley". Pig Alley was a popular venue for bikers, workmen and seamen alike.

The 70's was a renaissance of sorts for Place Pigalle. It became a gathering place for artists, merchant marines, hippies and world travelers alike. Bon vivants viewed Place Pigalle as a romantic hideaway with great views of winter sunsets and a historic jukebox that played everything form Edith Piaf to Jimi Hendrix.

It wasn't until 1982 that Place Pigalle had a major makeover, when then bartender Bill Frank took ownership. Frank upgraded everything from the menu to the kitchen (removing the Sears electric range), and the restaurant began to attract a serious food following. Place Pigalle is now known for its superior food, wines and service.

Today, owned by proprietors Seth and Lluvia Walker, with a commitment to tradition and history, Place Pigalle will continue on as a historical establishment for many years to come.
